When after tossings to and fro.

And tribulations bung.

I fall into a fifth sleep.

It rounds its baneful gong.
I bell indignant out of hed.

And choke the trident pest,

While passions primitive and flerce
Possess my angry breast.

Oh how I'd love to take a vlub

And knock it galley-west.

Film of a Famous Novel

An announcement of uncommon in-terest to theatregoers and bookreaders alike is that one of the greatest of the year's output of extraordinary film attractions. Clune's multiple pictorial translation of Harold B. Wright's famous story of love and adventure. The Eyes of the World' was booked for presentation at the Auditorium Friday and Saturday. The production is de-scribed briefly as a visualization in photodrama on a lavish scale—with which is co-ordinated a musical score of Wright's redblooded and romantic novel of California which has enjoyed a sale of more than 1,000,000 copies. The film is the fruitage of six months' exclusive and unremitting work at the big studios at Los Angeles and on the actual scenes described in the book. Those who have seen the virile characters of this delightful and stirring novel moving before the eyes as they clash in the struggle of two opposing ideals declare that it is the finest depiction of a current story ever put on the screen. The Eyes of the World consumes an entire afternoon or evening in its showing. The scenario was prepared by the noted author himself, and in performing this work he consid-erably amplified his tale, which now in visual form, carries the characters through two generations. Besides amplifying the story, Mr. Wright actively assisted in putting his scenes and characters before the camera. It is said that novel innovations, both in the demantic unfolding of the story and the dramatic unfolding of the story and in the technical form of presentment, will stamp "The Eyes of the World." as a mile-post in the development of cin

Synthetic Indigo.

Synthetic Indigo.

It took more than half a century of effort and the independent work of hundreds of research chemists before indigo was formed synthetically, and this was the first organic compound so to be made. And then the Badische company spent 17 years and $5,000,000 in industrial research before a pound of indigo could be put on the market. Prof. J. C. Arinur, of Purdue university, cited this striking fact at a discussion of the Chicago chapter of the society of the Sigma xi to illustrate that applied science is dependent for its material on the products of pure science, for "the indigo of commerce today is a possibility realized through the unpaid labor of many men devoted to pure science, extending over a long period, followed by the paid labor of fewer workers in industrial science during a much shorter period."
